25X1 25X1 The forward observer is the CO, and he directs the fire. A battalion CO (or battery CO) has about five to 10 men with 25X1 him for fire direction and communication, not for security. 25X1 Battalion and battery COs organize AT defenses by directing all fire against threatening tanks. No passive defenses, such as ditches, etc. are employed. 25X1 Aerial reconnaissance, scouting by artillery reconnaissance men, and interrogation of prisoners are used to survey a target area. 25X1 Artillery and mortar units, attached for support, are released to local control only after termination of a battle. 25X1 The gun commander is responsible for the service ability of his gun. If a gun does not fire correctly, or the mechanism does not function properly, it is in theory not supposed to be used, but in actual practice the gun will be fired in combat for as long as it can fire. 25X1 25X1 25X1 At the end of the last war (1945) the Soviets developed delayed action fuzes, MD 7 and MD 8 /membrannove deistvive7 25X1 shells with MD 7 or 25X1 MD 8 fuzes bury themselves in the ground near the target, and explode later. They are used to fire on enemy pill boxes and machine gun nests. They are also used in fragmentation/high explosive projectiles. 25X1 ricochet is accidental, and not a regular 25X1 method of firing by Soviet artillery. 25X1

In a typical Soviet attack the following guns are used:

- (a) 57-mm AT guns for antitank firing; 76-mm and 100-mm for firing against personnel, tanks and pill boxes.
- (b) 122-mm and 152-mm Howitzers, 80-mm and 120-mm mortars, M-13 Rocket Launchers for destroying fortifications and pill boxes.

All guns can be used as AT weapons.

12.7-mm AAMG, 37-mm and 85-mm AA guns are used against enemy planes and 152-mm SP guns) are considered artillery and are under artillery control and regulations.

15.

- (a) Subsequent concentration: all guns fire on the same target.
- (b) Standing barrage: artillery preparatory fire before the attack which does not displace.
- (c) Infantry accompanying barrage: guns either displace or transfer their fire.
- (d) Anti-tank barrage: stationary AT fire.
- (e) Rolling AT barrage: fire on tanks from guns which displace.

16.

Both point and area concentration fire are employed. Destruction fire with indirect artillery fire is conducted by firing according to map coordinates and by correcting the fire.

combat one unit is carried with the gun, and one or more units are in regimental trains.

33.

Soviet artillery has: direct support, (regimental and divisional guns support the attack) general support, (all guns, howitzers, mortars, tanks, SU's, rocket launchers), reinforcing (one battery helps other batteries) and general support reinforcing. If assigned batteries cannot accomplish the assigned mission, other batteries reinforce them.

34.

Dagger fire /kinzhalnyi ogon/ is overlapping crossfire and is frequently used.

35.

AT units can be used as regular artillery if there is not sufficient other artillery for the assigned mission.

36.

Newly arrived artillery units move into position anywhere from one night to two weeks ahead of an attack, depending on the ability to advance without alerting the enemy.

The main consideration in the selection of time is the secrecy of the move. Moves are usually at night and without lights. Gun positions are reconnoitered by division and regimental COs with their staffs, who then assign the positions to battalion CO, who, in turn, assign battery firing points. The crews, arriving with the guns prepare the gun positions, with particular emphasis on camouflage, ease of resupply of ammunition, terrain features, and visibility.
